COMEDY

Logline: A narrative story of a "washing machine" woman and a "fake facade" man about their long term relationship, using surrealism and absurdism as narrative devices.

Genre/Method: A short comedy film in 3D (Blender) for approx. 5 mins

Themes: Disparity and disconnection in a relationship

Synopsis :

Mrs A and Mr B are couples and have been together for a long time. Their daily live are full of cliches: Mr B goes out for work and Mrs A stays home and does the housework. Every night Mr B comes home and Mrs A does the laundry for him. They have dinner together and have sex sometimes. What breaks the routine is that one day Mr B put a red sock in the white laundry inside Mrs A and everything inside is dyed pink. They break out a strong fight and Mrs A swallows her husband in her "washing machine" world. During the adventure in her innerworld Mr B remembers that his wife is not a washing machine...

CHARACTERS

"washing machine" woman Mrs A

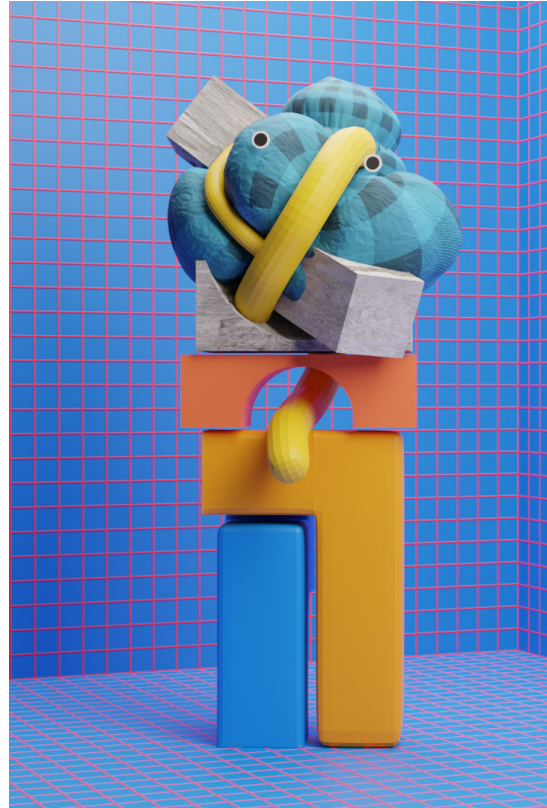

Mrs A is a housewife. Her body is filled with mundane objects, and there is a "washing machine" in the middle - this is what she looks like in her partner's eye: a multi-functional washing machine. The objects on her body are hoarded by herself and her husband day by day. It stands for a comfort zone that shapes her and traps her. In the end the audience will find out she is actually not a washing machine through a fight between the couple. The door is more like a spaceship porthole and there is a fantasyland inside her body.

CHARACTERS

"fake facade" man Mr B

initial concept design

test 3D model in Blender

Mr B has a fake head and a fake body. Everynight he goes home from work he takes off his fake facades to Mrs A and she washes and maintains them. Both of them are shaping and maintaining each other. On the contrary to Mrs A, this is how he looks like in his partner's eyes: He is composed by some simple geometry shapes. He has this yellow pipe wrapping around his brain which he uses for having sex.
